Article X provided that the committee of the states should be authorized to execute the delegated powers of Congress during recesses. Article XII stated that bills of credit, loans, and debts should be considered as a charge against the United States and for whose payment the United States and the public faith were pledged. Article XIII provided that every state should abide by the acts of Congress, that the union should be perpetual, and that no alteration should be made in the articles by Congress unless afterwards confirmed by the legislatures of every state. Fundamental weaknesses of the articles. --Admirable as this document was in many respects, it contained weaknesses which were certain to make the union temporary rather than perpetual: It failed to give the central government sufficient power. The articles were distinctly the instrument of a confederation of sovereign states, and not...
